

CFP for the First Special Issue (Deadline for full papers: November, 30th, 2019).
Issue's Theme: Technology in Language Learning

Editor in chief: Dr. Nadia Idri

Guest editor: Dr. Christian Ludwig (University of Bielefeld, Germany)

The JSLCS team is pleased to announce its first special issue. We invite authors to submit manuscripts for consideration in the Faculty of Arts and Languages' International, scholarly and multidisciplinary journal; Journal of Studies in Language, Culture and Society (JSLCS), University of Bejaia.

Technology is playing an increasing role in Foreign Language Learning (FLL). For example, it can support students in improving their language learning skills or help them organise their learning process. The aim of this special issue is to shed light on the various roles that (educational) digital media can have in the foreign language classroom, illustrating the vast potential that technology holds for increasing students' language learning and motivation. We invite contributions by scholars and practitioners alike, adding to the academic discussions revolving around technology in the classroom. All contributions should have a clear methodological focus, carving out the pedagogical potential of digital media and showcasing different technology tools. Possible topics to be discussed could, among others, include:

- Learner autonomy
- Virtual and augmented reality
- Blended learning
- Cooperative and collaborative learning
- Audio recordings
- Using blogs and wikis
- Vocabulary learning
- Grammar learning
- Skills training
- Collaborative writing
- Project- and task-based learning
- Pronunciation

- Assessment and evaluation
- situated learning
- Online reference tools
- Using pod- and vodcasts
- MOOCs and Webinars
- Producing and consuming electronic materials

Language: English
